

John Lacefield
Proposal
Web 1
Professor Brown

Fake Nuclear Weapons

For this project I'd like to propose a web page , titled "Nuclear Weapons Are Fake", it will present a controversial and thought-provoking perspective that challenges the mainstream narrative surrounding the existence and threat of nuclear weapons. This website will be dedicated to exploring the idea that nuclear weapons, as commonly portrayed by governments and the media, are either exaggerated, manipulated, or entirely fabricated. With the combined expertise and vision of its founders, Mark Andreessen and Owen Benjamin, the site will serve as a hub for critical thinking, alternative research, and discussions on the alleged myth of nuclear weaponry.

About the "founders"

Mark Andreessen: A self-taught researcher and writer, Anderneese has spent over a decade studying geopolitics, historical conflicts, and alternative theories related to global security. His focus is on the intersection of political power, military technology, and public perception. Through a combination of skepticism and academic rigor, Anderneese has cultivated a reputation for questioning the mainstream narratives about war, weapons, and international diplomacy.

Owen Benjamin: a transition from comedian to conspiracy theorist began in earnest around the mid-2010s when his public persona started to shift. Initially known for his stand-up comedy and appearances on mainstream platforms like YouTube and Comedy Central, Benjamin began to use his platform to question the veracity of commonly accepted historical events. His rhetoric increasingly aligned with alternative media outlets and anti-establishment viewpoints, leading him to publicly reject the narratives around events like 9/11, the moon landing, and, most notably, nuclear weapons.

The mission of the "Nuclear Weapons Are Fake" website is to provide a platform that:

1. Challenges the Narrative: The website will challenge the dominant narrative that nuclear weapons are real, potent, and capable of mass destruction. By presenting alternative views, historical examples, and declassified documents, the site will argue that nuclear weapons may be part of a larger psychological and geopolitical strategy to maintain control through fear.
2. Promotes Critical Thinking: Rather than presenting a dogmatic viewpoint, the site will encourage visitors to think critically about the evidence and assumptions that shape our understanding of nuclear weapons. This will involve highlighting discrepancies in mainstream media reports, inconsistencies in government statements, and alternative interpretations of key historical events like the Cold War and the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

3. Educates the Public: One of the primary goals is to educate the public about the scientific, political, and social implications of the nuclear weapons myth. By offering articles, documentaries, interviews, and expert analyses, the website will provide resources that help people see the issue from multiple angles.

With keeping all this information in mind I believe that creating a sleek and clean website will keep a focus on the topic by providing any video, podcast, tweet post or any other 'real' proof that nuclear weapons are fake. The webpage contents will be heavily supported with chat gpt to help create a more structural foundation and keep people on their toes to the information being fed to them. With the webpage being text heavy I'd like to include a break in information with large playful font work and imagery to keep a clean break for the viewer to digest information. The webpage will have clear tabs to direct the viewer to information about the founders, a page to purchase products in support that nuclear weapons are fake, and possibly a page to discuss or post their views about the subject. With this page I'd also like to keep it monochromatic with a pop of color. Keeping it so that the viewer knows the information is in black and white and to add a color that would reside in the logo.

In the long term, "Nuclear Weapons Are Fake" will evolve into a comprehensive platform that offers both intellectual and practical resources for those questioning the conventional understanding of nuclear warfare. The website will aim to collaborate with academic institutions, public intellectuals, and grassroots organizations to expand its influence and credibility.

The creation of "Nuclear Weapons Are Fake" represents a bold step toward fostering an informed, critical, and engaged public discourse about nuclear weapons and their role in shaping global politics. Through its unique content, thought-provoking research, and commitment to alternative perspectives, this website will challenge existing paradigms and empower individuals to think more deeply about the issues surrounding nuclear warfare.

By encouraging skepticism, dialogue, and education, "Nuclear Weapons Are Fake" will contribute to the ongoing search for peace, truth, and security in the modern world.